Suzan Etkin Enterprises provides designers with a venue to incorporate hand-blown glass into their design vocabulary and to expand the capabilities of hand made glass into unimagined applications.

When artist Suzan Etkin founded the studio in 2001, the aim was to use it as an extension of her sculptural work. A conceptual artist of global recognition, she has shown her work at numerous museums including the Museum of Modern Art, New York, as well as countless national and international galleries. Her passionate involvement with glass began when she was invited to design chandeliers in collaboration with master glass blowers on the historic glass blowing island of Murano, Italy, in 1993.

After these first chandeliers were exhibited in galleries as sculpture, she set out to offer custom glass chandelier design and fabrication to architects and designers. What she discovered was that the design community was eager to design with hand-made glass in applications that had yet to be invented. Thus began a series of unique collaborative ventures, often requiring complex design explorations, engineering and testing to coax the inherently organic material into precise and safely designed structures while maintaining the magic of the glass.

Throughout, Suzan Etkin Enterprises has compiled an invaluable network of international glass blowers, structural engineers and artisans giving the studio the expertise required to realize the entire scope of a project.
